TIMBER SALES ARE NECESSARY FOR
FORESTSTrees Are Permitted More
Room in Which to Grow
When Older Ones Are Cut
Away Declares Ringland.

The forestry service often has difficulty in accomplishing some of its fundamental purposes," remarked District Forester A. C. Ringland to-day, "through the failure of the general public to appreciate the conditions under which it operates or the significance of its transactions."

"A line and a tree is usually raised from some quarter when a big sale of timber is made by the department, and the ill-considered declaration is made that the forestry service is damaging the country and destroying the nation's most important resources. These protests are usually traceable to the accounts published in newspapers of the number of feet, or of acres involved, figures which always seem enormous when exhibited by themselves, but in connection with total areas, and the number of feet standing dwindle surprisingly."

"As a matter of fact, the forestry service is far from wasting a root of timber in the national forests. We cut each year a portion of the annual growth and the removal of timber is an actual advantage in sparing the growth of other trees, and thus produces actual gain in the size of the forests instead of causing a decrease."

"The simple principle is that each tree to live requires a certain amount of space and light. The judicious removal of neighboring trees possible under our system of expert foresting gives growing trees a chance, by eliminating this element of plant competition. We do not 'denude' or 'devastate' as some who are poorly informed or naturally malicious would suggest."

"The matter of timber sales is but one of getting revenue. The principal on which we work is that the national forests can be compared to the permanent investment of a big company, the United States. Our yearly interest is the annual growth. By disposing of a part of this interest we are enabled more efficiently to conduct the management of the business, but our yearly earnings are not equivalent to our yearly increase, and consequently the balance shows a continual increase in the capital stock. To make it clearer, if we refused to sell timber from time to time, we would be in the position of a man who puts his money away in a safe. Of course some time has been devoted in the organization of the forestry branch of the department of agriculture, to the mere taking of stock. This is a gigantic enterprise, but a necessary one. It involves nearly 200,000,000 acres. In district three, whose headquarters are in Albuquerque, it was begun as early as 1903. This district comprises Arizona and New Mexico, Oklahoma, Arkansas and Florida. Within two or at the most, three more years, the stock taking will have been completed for practically all the timber now accessible upon the various forests. At present, stock taking has been completed or is under way on fifteen of the twenty-two forests."

It is the established policy of the forest service to sell timber which is mature and over-mature, and which can be cut without detriment to the stand and in such a way as to insure a second crop. However, in gaging the amounts to be sold this must be so logged that there will always be a constant supply of timber on hand. Without going into the details of technical forestry, the underlying principle is this: If it takes 100 years to grow a crop of timber on a given area, 1-100 of this area can be conservatively cut over each year and still a constant and equal amount obtained from the whole area without in any way decreasing its productivity. This is what the forest service claims to do on a large scale. As a matter of fact, the productivity is greatly enhanced by means of improved growth conditions following right fire protection.

Each year the secretary of agriculture fixes the limitation on each of the national forests. The recommendations for these limitations have just been forwarded by the district forester in Albuquerque. It is of interest that the total recommended cut for district 3 is 168,522,000 feet B. M. of sawtimber and 249,852 cords of cordwood. The total estimated stand in the whole area is 23,766,158,000 feet B. M. of sawtimber of which 16,300,000,000 feet

ALBUQUERQUE POLICE
ARREST A SUSPECTTelegraphed Description Received
Last Night, and Suspect Is Found
Within an Hour; Wanted in Albu-ququerque.

Showing that the Albuquerque police force is alive and on the job was again demonstrated last night when a description was telegraphed them by Sheriff H. M. Denny of Alamogordo of a man who was wanted in that city. Inside of an hour the man was arrested in one of the South First street rooming houses by Officer Lujan. The man is wanted in Alamogordo on a charge of stabbing his wife last July. Upon receiving notice that the man had been taken the sheriff telegraphed Chief McMillin that he should hold the suspect and that he would be here for the man.

That there is ample reward in work well done is illustrated by the case of A. Berta, once the head chef of the Alvarado hotel. Mr. Berta is a cook of the school that places the culinary art at the head of the list in all departments of human endeavor. During the years since he has been seen among the ranges and griddles that skirt the silver pines of the Alvarado, he has wandered leisurely over the face of the earth, secure in the possession of a map which places him on the road to the heart of men of whatever nationality.

Last night he arrived from San Francisco, where for several months he has been employed by a French restaurant of renown. He will visit his wife, who resides here, until Thursday, when he will again wind his way through the continent and to his native land, Arizona, at the Belvedere hotel, Switzerland, where he will continue his noble work of dispensing culinary hospitality. Last September he returned from a tour of all of Europe. Mr. Berta is not altogether a rolling stone, however, and his bank account is said to be as good to look at as a well turned steak. Not the least among the well turned stakes of Mr. Berta's useful lifetime is a handsome piece of improved property on Marquette avenue.

FOUR GAMES ARE
PUNK BASEBALLSaturday and Sunday's Games
Are Muddy and Lifeless Full of Errors and Runs; Invincible Happys Fall Down.

The mud and the slush on the field seems to have gotten into the bones of the players in the four games played at Traction park in the last two days. First thing the Indians got up against the Varsity and beat them by a score of 11 to 12, which was only exciting because it was so close. The score by innings shows what kind of a game it was:

Indians 11 22 22-12

Varsity 10 21 20-11

Then the Varsity tried it out with the Santa Fe lads and fared even worse than in the first game, being beaten 6 to 1. Nuff sed.

Sunday didn't give the fans a much better show than that handed out by the scholastic teams.

The Happys went down in defeat before Dan Padilla's bunch by a score of 15 to 7.

Young Weeks was in the box for the Happys but was not there. He was either having one of his off days or else he didn't care whether he won or not. Had the management of the Happys substituted Leo Murphy earlier in the game the slaughter might have been stopped sooner.

O'Bannon pitched the last five innings and struck out seven men. One hit was made, but no score against O'Hannon.

FREAK LAMB HAS
EYES BELOW ITS MOUTHMiserable Creature Born on Ranch of
A. Salazar; Cannot Live Because of Disarrangement of Breathing Organs.

A. Salazar, a rancher who lives in the neighborhood of Ranchos de Atreiso, was in the city Saturday night, trying to dispose of a freak lamb born on the morning of that day. The eyes and ears of the little creature occurred beneath its mouth, on the neck, giving it a most grotesque appearance. The ears are below the eyes and quite close together. The eyes are wide open and have the appearance of staring. Otherwise the lamb is normal and is about the size and color of a jack-sparrow. It lived about five minutes after birth, but efforts to preserve it after that length of time were unavailing, as the organs of breathing were disarranged by the unnatural distortion.
